

Notes on Contributors

JEREMY BURCHARDT is a Lecturer in Rural History at the Rural History Centre in the University of Reading. After completing his PhD thesis on the allotment movement in nineteenth-century England, he was principal research officer of the Hampshire Transport Research Programme. He is currently writing a book about allotments in nineteenth- and twentieth-century England, and is also working on the contribution made by other forms of small-scaled landholding to the rural economy and society. His other research interests include urban perceptions of the countryside in twentieth-century Britain and the changing place of farmers within village society since 1945.

RICHARD MOORE-COLYER is Professor of Agrarian History in the University of Wales. He has published extensively on a variety of subjects relating to the history of agriculture and rural society from the eighteenth to the twentieth century. Current interests range from the prehistory of Welsh agriculture through the rural history of Northamptonshire to the more recent history of the rural environment in Wales and the West Midlands of England.

MICHAEL FREEMAN has taught geography at the University of Oxford since 1975. Among his recent publications are Atlas of Nazi Germany: A Political, Economic and Social Anatomy of the Third Reich, Longman, 2nd edition, 1995; and 'Plebs or predators: deer-stealing in Whichwood Forest, Oxfordshire, in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries', Social History 21, 1996, pp 1-21. He is presently writing a book for Yale University Press on railways and the Victorian imagination.

P D A HARVEY has been Professor Emeritus of Medieval History at the University of Durham since 1985. Before becoming a lecturer at the University of Southampton in 1966 he had been employed in the Warwick County Record Office and the Department of Manuscripts at the British Museum, and he has a continuing interest in archives and records preservation; he is currently Chairman of the British Records Association. His work on the medieval records of Cuxham, Oxfordshire, begun in 1953, resulted in a book on the village (1965) and an edition of its records (1976). He continues research and publication on the agrarian and social history of medieval England, as well as on the history of cartography.

EDWARD I NEWMAN is at the School of Biological Sciences, University of Bristol, where he has been based for nearly thirty years. His teaching has been mainly on ecology. He is the author of a text-book, Applied Ecology (Blackwell Science, 1993). His research interests centre around relations between plants and soil, including nutrient cycling, nutrient acquisition by plants, and the role of soil fungi. In the past this research has involved laboratory and field experiments; his move into historical ecology is fairly new.

EDMUND PENNING-ROWSELL is Professor of Geography and Pro Vice-Chancellor at Middlesex University. His initial research interests at University College London were concerned with hydrology. More recently he has been examining the role of government in agricultural change in Britain, 1917-22.

THE AGRICULTURAL HISTORY REVIEW

DEPARTMENT OF GEOGRAPHY, UNIVERSITY OF KEELE,
KEELE, STAFFORDSHIRE ST5 5BG

The Review is published twice yearly by The British Agricultural History Society and issued to all members. Single copies may be purchased by members from the Treasurer at current subscription rates. Back numbers are available to ordinary members at £7.50 per issue and to non-members and agencies at £12.50 per issue.

Contributions and letters on any aspect of the history of agriculture and rural society and economy should be sent to the Editors. Articles are normally expected to be about 8000 words in length, but manuscripts of up to 15,000 words are also welcomed. Proposals for supplements of length intermediate between the long article and the book, normally not exceeding 30,000 words should also be sent to the Editors. Intending contributors are advised first to obtain a copy of the Review's 'Notes for Authors and Reviewers' from the Editors. The Society does not accept responsibility for the opinions expressed by contributors, or for the accidental loss of manuscripts, or for their return if they are not accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope.

Correspondence about conferences and meetings of the Society, and about more general matters, should be sent to Dr R Hoyle, Secretary, BAHS, Department of Historical and Critical Studies, University of Central Lancashire, Preston PR1 2HE.

Correspondence on matters relating to membership, subscriptions, details of change of address, sale of publications, and exchange publications should be addressed to Professor Mark Overton, Treasurer, BAHS, c/o Department of Economic and Social History, University of Exeter, Exeter EX4 4RJ.
