

Notes on contributors

MADELEINE LYNCH DUNGY (PhD, Harvard University) is a Max Weber Fellow at the European University Institute. Her doctoral dissertation examined different models of international economic order in the early twentieth century. She is currently developing a new research project focusing on the tensions between free trade and labour mobility in the League of Nations and the International Labour Organization. Email: madeleine.dungy@eui.eu

NICCOLÒ MIGNEMI (PhD, EHESS) is Fellow of the École française de Rome. His current research project focuses on the history of the national and international organizations and policies developed for governing the agrarian question between the 1880s and the mid-twentieth century. He has published on the Italian and French agricultural cooperative movement, and is the author of Coopératives et mondes agricoles. Histoire comparée des coopératives agricoles en France et en Italie (années 1880–1950) (forthcoming). Email: niccolo.mignemi@gmail.com

FEDERICO D'ONOFRIO (PhD, Utrecht University) is Senior SNF Researcher at the Centre Walras-Pareto for the History of Economics of the University of Lausanne. He is the author of Observing agriculture in early twentieth-century Italy: agricultural economists and statistics on Italian agricultural statistics. His main research interests are in the history of statistics and agricultural economics. Email: donofrioinnl@gmail.com

JUAN PAN-MONTOJO is Associate Professor of Modern History at the Universidad Autónoma de Madrid. He has dedicated most of his research to the history of agrarian policies and agrarian organizations in Spain, as well as in other European and Latin American countries. He has most recently been co-editor of the books, Agriculture in the Age of Fascism (2014) and Agriculture in capitalist Europe: from food shortages to food surpluses (2016). He was the editor of the Spanish journal of agricultural history, Historia agraria, between 2010 and 2014 and he is currently the editor of the journal of modern history, Ayer. Email: juanluis.pan@uam.es

JANKEN MYRDAL has retired from the Chair of Agrarian History, Swedish University of Agricultural Sciences, Uppsala, and is now researcher at the department of Economic History, Stockholm University.

RICHARD PERREN is Reader Emeritus in Economic History at the University of Aberdeen. He has contributed to volumes VI and VII of The Agrarian History of England and Wales, the Economic History Review and Aberdeen 1800–2000: a new history. His recent publications have dealt with the history of the international meat industry and he is currently working on the historical development of the meat and livestock industry of north-east Scotland. Email: r.perren@abdn.ac.uk.

AMALIA RIBI FORCLAZ is Assistant Professor in International History at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva. Her current research project focuses on the history of agricultural knowledge production and development between 1920 and 1960. She has published on international agricultural institutions and expertise in journals such as Contemporary European History and Global History and is currently working on a book titled Peasants, Poverty and Politics: International Organizations and the Conceptualization of Agricultural Development, 1920–1960. Email: a.ribi.forclaz@gmail.com

ALEXANDRA SAPOZNIK is lecturer in late medieval history at King's College London. Her main research interests are in medieval economic history, especially agrarian history. Email: alexandra.sapoznik@kcl.ac.uk

SARAH WAGER is interested in the history of the English countryside, particularly in the medieval period. Her doctoral thesis, undertaken part time in the School of History at the University of Birmingham, was published in 1998 as Woods, Wolds and Groves: the woodland of medieval Warwickshire (British Archaeological Reports, British Series, 269). Her recent retirement from local government service has enabled her to spend more time on historical research. Email: s.wager01@btinternet.com